The Politics and Policies of Relief, Aid and Reconstruction: Contrasting approaches to disasters and emergencies

Innovation in the world institutions and global politics as well as in the physical environment and practices of the contemporary societies has raised the need for specific and up-to-date knowledge about the politics and policies of relief, aid and reconstruction. This book advances the political analysis of international disaster policies which have been mostly in the domain of other social sciences. Attina looks at the formation of this field of study and analyses the most recent disaster events including the Haiti earthquake, the tsunami which hit the Pacific Ocean countries and the genocide in Rwanda and Former Yugoslavia. Broadly linked to constructivism and neo-institutionalism, this book looks also at the impact of these cooperation policies on the governance of the present global system.
