She just wanted a night to forget...

Chloe:
Being recently divorced has left me scorned by love. Now, I dedicate all of my time to my work as an interior designer. Yet, here I am, with this stupidly handsome gentleman named Vincent Rauban that I find myself utterly drawn to. It takes only one night of pouring our hearts out over glasses of wine for my heart to start whispering that maybe love wouldn't be so bad after all. Naturally, I shut it up with another half of a bottle of wine and crawled in bed with him. That was supposed to be the end of it, so imagine my surprise when I get to work the next day, and find myself with a new, high paying client, one Mr. Vincent Rauban. When will I learn that it's safer to just curl around a bottle of wine and cry over a romantic comedy?

Vincent:
I'm not sure what drew me over to that dame at the bar, sitting there glaring at her drink like it was the source of all of her problems. Maybe I felt some strange sort of empathy toward that irritated stare. When I approached her with an offer of a bottle of wine and a chat on the balcony, for the first time, I wasn't expecting her to say yes. After a surprising heart to heart, and several glasses of wine, we spent the night together. Though I've only known her for a night, I can't deny that she's set my heart aflame. I want to grow to love her, to see what could come of this. I just wish she'd let me.
